Ayr. Of the "Twa Brigs" the "Auld," which was built in 1250, owes its fame principally to Burns. The new bridge—also known to Burns—was built in 1788, and the prophecy in his poem was fulfilled, for in 1877, during heavy floods, this bridge gave way, and was replaced by the present structure. There are four other bridges crossing the river Ayr, two used by the railway, and a foot-bridge, and the Victoria Bridge beyond the railway station.
